

The personal reason I created the Levidier was to be a force, a community of power, stability and security. Each bloodline and branch would grow to stand as a powerful institution. One whose security and power is created, sustained and maintained internally with minimal need or dependence on external factors.

We are a family of individuals where it is not odd for anyone in the family to drive any car in the fleet. Yours isn't working drive mine for a while I'm good no questions asked, just take care of it. You don't have money that's not possible because I do, your wife is giving birth (or you are one of our ladies) we are in the hallway of the hospital waiting for the news of a safe delivery, or to rush back and get the bag you forgot and finish the baby bed you had to leave halfway. And all you sent was a text saying "baby is coming" for us all to instinctively know to turn up seeing each other there. You're moving houses, every single person in the group has a box in hand walking to the truck and no one had to ask and it didn't need to be discussed we all instinctively knew the plan. You're in the hospital each of us take turns bringing you what you need and keeping you company until you're out. In our place it's not a question if the others will show up to help, it's a certainty, without asking, without question. Because it's who we are, it's what we do.

But not everyone has the character, vision, morality, ethics or capability to create, maintain or be a part of something of that calibre (trust me I've seen it). The world has convinced us it's better to only care about ourselves and we can't trust anyone. Even if you have the intent most people struggle to execute as they don't always possess the capacity to see where a person's point of need may be without being told. The romanticisation of Individuality and independence has made most people forget that no man is an island we are stronger together and if we get it right, we will each have a higher standard of life if we can find people who can be trusted and hold our ethics and values (or better). Loyalty for loyalty, trust for trust, reinforced time and time again. If you feel pain I feel pain, if you have won, I have won too and I trust that because you have shown that.

Because of this membership would be limited. Members are invited and accepted based on tried, tested and proven alignment. Displayed to the collective through actions that is a representation of one's character. Freedom given in order for evaluation. We are not a family that desires or requires others, we are a family who sees individuals and decide to extend our borders and resources to cover them as they add their own to empower our collective. Members of this family must possess honesty and integrity and honour. That is Levidier.
